

Actions Not Words

Problem

With a more globalized and diversified society, there are many complicated issues that we need to face. Those who have a global mindset and can take actions not just the words have a possibility to solve these issues.

However, current Japanese education tend to be too much textbook-based and both teachers and students are likely to focus on just acquiring knowledge itself. With the situation as it is, it is apparent that Japan would face a difficult situation in the global society.

Conclusion

Although, SGH program will finish this year, this form of education is necessary for the brighter future of Japan. This education itself would cultivate global citizens who can survive in the complex global society. We strongly argue for this program to be continued into next generation. Education is an only solution for this program.
