

Hypothesis

Power sharing is an effectual way to create a multicultural community.

Power sharing

Forms: Distribution of representative seats and money, etc.

By: The United Nations, a court, negotiation between ethnic leaders, etc.

A multicultural community

↳ Mutual dependence

Coexistence is essential because people depend on the benefit gained by each other.

Case studies (Research areas: Johannesburg, Sarajevo, Brussels, Belfast)

BEFORE

AFTER

Johannesburg, South Africa

An economic disparity between the whites and the blacks

Blacks

Unstable their living standards in the black area (they boycotted against the whites.)

Whites

Lack of security because of blacks' boycotts

Reforming of district configuration (Each of these whites administrations would have responsibility for managing black townships within its MSS borders.)

Blacks

Their living standards were improved and they gained economical stabilization.

Whites

They obtained security from the boycotts.

Belfast, Northern Ireland

Disparities in social status between Catholics and Protestants (Catholics were living in Northern Ireland and Protestants Immigrated there from England)

Catholics

Only a few Catholics had political participation, though all Protestants had authority. (they were resisted in order to insist their authority.)

Protestants

Being in danger because of resistance movement of Catholics

Made an assembly which was composed of political parties of both Catholics and Protestants

Catholics

They gained authority to govern their local politics.

Protestants

They obtained their stable living security from being in conflict.

Analysis

○ Power sharing can make mutual dependence by adjusting imbalance of power between ethnic groups.

○ There are 3 steps to reach a mutually dependent community via power sharing.

Step 1, ONLY the weaker demands its own rights or benefits from the stronger;

Step 2, Power sharing is implemented;

Step 3, BOTH the stronger and the weaker depend on benefits gained from each other.

Conclusion

Power sharing is an effectual way to create a multicultural community.
